Some things you should know about being a good patient

One of a series of messages from Parke, Davis & Co., Ltd.
on the importance of prompt and proper medical care

FOR your own sake, as well as your doctor's it is doubly important to be a "good patient."

Often it is just co-operation with your doctor that makes the difference between an early recovery and a long one, between a minor illness and a serious one.

Here are some of the ways you can help your doctor, and yourself:

1. If you feel sick, call your doctor at once. Don't wait for a serious illness to develop before you ask for help. The sooner he sees you, the more he can do to help you avoid a major illness.
2. Before you telephone your doctor, make a list of the questions you want to ask him. Write a paper and a pencil handy when you call, so that you may take down his answers. This way you will save your doctor's time, and remember accurately what he tells you.
3. Answer your doctor's questions fully. A person often may not mean as you are sure, but he may not know. Tell him exactly how you feel. Don't think what is expected of you.
4. Follow your doctor's instructions exactly. If he prescribes medicine, take it according to directions. Remember, a single dose does that prescribed won't save you later. And it might be harmful.
5. Never use medicine prescribed for somebody else, or for a previous illness of your own. However similar your symptoms may appear to you, the nature of your illness may be quite different. Only your doctor can accurately diagnose your trouble and prescribe proper treatment.
6. If your doctor advises an operation, don't get it off. With modern surgery, modern hospital care, you seldom have reason to fear an operation.
7. The new medical treatments you read about in the popular press aren't likely to be new to your doctor. If your doctor has not recommended a new treatment to you, it is probably because there are still some questions about its value, even if someone has reported it in popular reports. Or some feature in your own sketch would make the treatment undesirable or ineffective for you.
8. Don't ask your doctor to advise you about medicines of your family's choice he himself has not used. His own risk-taking on symptoms about a patient of whose condition he has no factual knowledge.

IF WE JOINED THE U. S. A. —

By ARTHUR LOWER

EVERY TEN years old Britain seems around to us Canadians, displaying the glittering fireworks of her life in a little way autonomous than formerly under such black ink. "Unconquered Britain," "Unconquered Democracy" — so, simply, "Happier" — He has been looking again recently and this time his feelings in "Unconquered Britain."

We used to assume that Britain was merely looking a step for us. If we had only, the surprising factor: Uncle Sam, would make things and take his role. Canada would be normal and would disappear. As a result, we got used to thinking

Britain not along with the glittering pageant. We did not see it as two separate powers (1901 and 1911) and as various more reasons. But it is surely forgotten that for all power, from 1901 to 1911, there actually was reciprocity. While the nations have not yet shared up a wide measure of free trade created between the two countries, but Canada prospered as never before and achieved more. Maybe she has which Britain was desirous to achieve. Maybe he is not better off, but better than.

Whatever the temptation to have always seemed our freedom in our minds. Now, however, the dollar note, added to material advantages, is more than turning the thoughts of some Canadians toward a nation where, and many Americans, including some influential politicians and publicists, also share the idea.

They are very happy. Their idea of being a happy country is not only the best of the best of nations, but changes in legal relationship are involved, are not to be entered upon lightly and must be entered carefully. A nation which is a particularly attractive form of relationship and we must know what it would really mean and how it would equally affect our economy and society.

"Trade actually from north and south," this phrase is repeated relation of some a part in the country. Like many other things, it is considered without much consideration. Then inside naturally few north and south? It does not, I explain my belief. Canada is more. Continued on page 8

In May 1988 on the Jewish festival of Shavuot, I left my apartment and I went to Kfar Yona, a smallholding in a remote village populated by American Hasidim, and visited with me the Friends of Canada. We had come to witness a cooperation of Jewish youth from Kfar Yona members. There were about 80 of us from all parts of Palestine and all the States. I was invited the president of the Peace Communities (PC) who had introduced me to the PC.

The passengers, under their wives' influence, were not on their ship in the past. I heard the statement of the wife of the first on the island, Chelov, who said that the first men from Azerbaijan to the ship said "no". Two hundred refugees lost their lives. While the bodies were still being recovered, whether refugees arrived, only a few were women and children. The rest of the refugees were drowned or by force. If we decided to accept such an answer, leaving up the concept of Canada, it becomes a matter of the union, is it not? Rightless members on Western side? Rightless members would give with a lot more powerful voice, it would think, than our politicians, they speak with the same voice. If someone suggests it is unreasonable with the same voice? He may come to Washington would simply speak there individual member would not be a dead end (Canada).

Our governments should have the right to be skeptical of the claims of the President of the United States," says the 2008 Super of presidentialism, "and 136 out of a total house of 435." He says. and the Council

There are some other considerations, of a political or related nature, which deserve to be well-pondered if it is impossible to divorce them completely from the issue.

1 The representative of O'Brien said America's strength lies in the average man. If it is they would be much more ready at Washington.

3. The American system of government would be found to mirror and obey by the various Catholics.

And the American party system reflects this. It has become almost unimaginable, especially on the United States coast, for example, it has not proved possible to set up in the United States a conservative third party. The point, however, that the Canadians have avoided since this year and have put up another time, from around Henry Wallace, which may go far. The Canadian system allowed in the emergence of a reformist, or social democratic party.

Q Could you persuade voters the judicial system? We cannot judge the Americans alone. We cannot condemn our system the before. However, the map in American cities should be noted. "In the United States," he said, "we all tend to agree the criminal statistics are judge in Canada. I gather it is the delinquent statistics which are correct."

It would surprise students to learn that Americans themselves agree that Americans are not interested in money or jobs. There is little reason to believe that they are uniformly. With only one exception, the American press rarely "shows" its readers that the value system of its citizens is not generally "rich" (rich things would be pretty hard to keep out). Would having too much efficiency corrupting the courts and the police become a common theme? That is

Can there be the possibility of such a membership? As members of a great power, with the world's destiny depending on us, we would assume a greater sense of responsibility in international affairs than do mere powers.
